Ye gentlemen and ladies all Who live about these diggins, Come listen to the mountful tale Of Jeremiah Wiggins. Who brought upon himself, besides Upon his family, sir, Much sorrow and unhappiness

By trusting Whiggery, sir. In eighteen hundred thirty-nine, I was a happy man, sir, And jugged along, quite soberly Beneath the rule of Van, sir. I raised my slicep and sold my wool For forty cents a pound, si ; And I'd enough to eat and drack,

And cash the whole year sound, sir. My children then all went to school, As bright as bran new dollars, With spelling book ., geographies, And next stirched linen collars; I looked upon my granaries, My meadows and my ra tle.

And thought that I was pretty well With poverty to buttle. But, in eighteen hundred forty came A great hard-eider preacher, I found him taking tea with wife, And trying for to teach her. He told us how the country was In great distress and ruin, And all upon account, he sail,

Of Martin Mac Van Buren. He to'd us how the industry Of all the world he'd blighted, How he had got 'the 'Purse and Sword' Tenaciously united; A standing aimy, too he said, He'd got to rule the nation.

And a plan to tax our poultry, too. He had in contemplation. He said he'd grown to be as fall, As our old whi e house steeple. 'Yen cents a day and bean soup,' was all That he would give the people. From Commerce and the Arts, he said, He'd crush the very breath, sir, And all the laborers of the land,

He meant to starve to death, ir. He said he kept an English coach, And wore a broadcloth clock, sir. And to the common people, that He scarcely ever spoke, sit. That he lived in splendor like a prince, From care and thought exempt, sir, And had for us and all the world, A most supreme contempt, sir.

And then he sung a song that filled Us all check full of wonder, About one Mr. Harrison, Who fought like blood and thunder. And killed more Indians in a day Than you could pile or stack, sir, Between the Archipelago And bloody Sarmae, sir.

And then he said if I would vote Agonst the tyrant Martin, That I should get for all my wool, Some sixty cents for sactin. That every thing I had to sell Would bring a double | rice, sir, If I would go for 'Fip and Ty' And get them in so nice, sir.

'Roast beef,' besides, he said, we all Should get in reigning plenty, And where we had a dollar now, We then should handle twenty: And then he made me join and sing A song, he had it-' I' erefore We'll go for Tip and Ty, my boys, Without a why or wherefore.'

Well, so I left my farm and work, And went to 'lectioneering, A carrying flags and singing songs, Hard coder meetings steering. I got a banner, caught a coon, And built a fine log cibin, And gave the locos right and left A most terrific stabbin.

I could'ut stop to hoe my corn,

My cattle I neglected, 'Twould all be right, they told me, if 'old Im' he got elected. And so I went the summer through, At home once in a week, sir, And then, with patriotic work, So hourse I could'ut speak, sir. At first I took a little wine, But all the leaders tott, sir. How a little drop of harder stuff,

Would make me feel more bold, sir; And so I followed their advice. And guzzled gin and brandy, And then they said I used my tongue Most excellent and handy. In short, I rode, and yelled and bawled, Through ut the whole campaign, sic,

And do uned my wife and children if They ever dared complain, sir. I spent my money and my time, In debt ran head and ears, sir, But then 'Old Tip' would make it right They said, and I'd no fears, .ir. At last the 'lection day come on, And 'Tip and Ty' got in, sir,

I to ked to see the 'better times' Immediately begin, sir. I held my wool at sixty cents, The price of labor double, And to ught about that are 'roast beef,' There'd be no sort of trouble. But time went on, and still there came

No better times nor money, And all my old hard eider friends Grew any thing but honey. My crops were list, my fences down, My business all neglected. And my poor wife at last begin To cry and look dejected.

One day I went to put my gate Once more upon its hinges, My conscience giving me at times Some pretty saucy twinges, When Mr. Sheriff Sharp came up With write about a pail full, And then my prospects gan to look

To me a little baleful. He took my chaise, he took my horse, To me it was a pazzler, The writs were all in favor of Some old hard eider guzztler. They sold my horse, my cat le, and They turned my wife out door, sir,

And marched me off to jui because i could'nt pay them more, sir. I'm left at last as poor as dirt, My property all wasted; The cup of whiggery I think, Most bitterly I've tasted, I've put my child:en out, my wife Has sought a new provider, And here I am my hat smashed in,

A victim of hard eider. Ye gentlemen and ladies all Who live about the diggins, Who've listened to the mountful tale Of Jeremiah Wiggins, Take waining from his cinel fate Lest you at last like he, sir, Bring down ruin on yourself

By trusting whiggery, sir.

There are a certain number of weights to be carried about in this world every day-and if every body would take one, man, I wish I may be shot if that ram that was here they would be carried without being felt; but unfortunately 'tother day doesn't belong to this here man. so many shirk them, under one pretence or another, that the comparatively few to whom they fall, are miserably overloaded, while the rest walk about and seem to enjoy the un- er. his own buiden, there would be no broken backs.

The Whigs becoming Hard Money

Capt. John Duffey, former editor of the Columbus Freeman, has recently established a new paper in that city, in which he gives the following account of the Preselent of the Columbus Clay Club, who has been visiting New Orleans and has returned a "hard money man." It was but a short time since, that an attempt was made to designate a "hard money man" as a term of reproach, and now even the whige are aspiring to the title as an honorable distinction. Captain Duffey says:

"Our city has been in a great bustle-pardon, dearest ladies, we make no allusions-for a week past, in consequence of the return from the South of a once promine t whig, and President of the Columbus Clay Club, who now avows himself a convert to the doctrines, and sustains himself with arguments, of the almost entire reputhins himself with arguments, of the almost entire repudiation of the banking system. He went, has seen, and lams. has felt the hard money, and he now proclaims that the mencing about the first of May, and to be continued till after the hard is available; that it is the true constitutional regu- August election, in the very low price of people."
